WHEELING, NOVEMBER 24, 1894.

Who Will Get the Banners? Attention, Republicans!

West Virginia has joined the column of protection, but "our friends, the enemy," will do their best to pull her out. She will remain where she is and win fresh glories if the fighting Republicans of the state do their duty and their full duty. Another victory and West Virginia's position in the Union will be fixed for many years.

To stimulate the forces to their best endeavor the Interligences has determined to set up a generous rivalry. Looking to 1898, when West Virginia must give her vote by a handsome majority to the champions of protection, the Intelligences offers two silken, gold-emblazoned banners, one to Ohio county and one to the state.

The Ohio county banner will go to the magisterial district showing the largest increase in the Republican vote over the vote of 1892. The state banner will go to the county achieving the like result. This gives all contestants a fair chance and puts them all on their

It will be a great distinction to bear the Intelligences banner of 1896, inecribed with the record of a well-won victory. The time to enter the competition is now, and the way to enter is to get right down to work. The returns will tell who the victors are.

Forward, Republicans! On to vic-

"Old Bill Gibson,"

There is none to replace General William H. Gibson, who lies dead at his late home in Tiffin. General Gibson was one of the fighting soldiers of the war. Under his command the Forty-ninth Ohio made itself a fame that is the glory of the state. As a brigade commander General Gibson showed the splendid courage and dash which had characterized him at the head of his regiment. It was as a speaker that General Gibson was most renowed. He had no superior in his moving mastery over an audience, and they are fortunate who have heard his equal. He could propleased. A man who had his nimble wit would have become famous for that nlone. In invective he was superb. His eloquence was the pure, unadulterated article. Word pictures, figures of speech, letty ideas, felt from his lips in overwhelming torrents.

He was a stumper of infinite power, but he was at his best where he most liked to be, in an assemblage of old soldiers, all of whom were to him comrades and "boys." He seemed a happy composite of the lawyer, the soldier the statesman and the Methodist ex-

PARKERSBURG thinks she has had a little earthquake shock. It was probably Charley Caldwell having a laugh.

Archbishop Corrigan and Father Ducey.

It is a fact that Archbishop Corrigan took Rev. Father Ducey to task for attending the meetings of the Lexow committee. Here is part of what he said in his letter of reproval:

I have noticed with pain your repeated at-tendance at the sessions of the Lexow investi-gating committee. An lonest Catholic layman would blink to go to such an assemblage, as the Lexow investigating committee of his own free will. That you, a priest, should have attended such sittings daily and seemed to glory in so doing was disculfying.

This the archbishop follows up with an admonition warning Fathey Ducey "to abstain in future from going to the sessions of the Lexow committee with out permission in writing from me. Father Ducey replies to the archbishop's "very strange letter" in a way that becomes him as a fearless priest and a self-respecting American citizen. He tells him that the Catholic church in New York has missed a great opporunity for good because it has not "openly acted with courage in opposing the corruption and corruptors of this great city," and "now-Dr. Parkhurst has won!" Continuing Father Ducey says that all the churches have lost a great opportunity, and he adds:

great opportunity, and he adds:

Now let me my to your excellency. I am greative surprises at the phrasing of your letter of November 14. That you should be "pained" at a course which has merited the recomption of the most distinguished eititens of the United States and the best known and most houserd names in this community, is certainly most strange, if not sad. The "houset Catholic laymen who would blusb to go to such an assemblage as the Lexow investigating committee," must, I think, be strangely constituted mentally, morally and physically, I deem it the duty of every good eititum to assist the Lexow committee and its counsel in the effort to purify the city by removine ossepool of crime and corruption craised and fostered by the corrupt managers of Tanmany hall. The deleat of this corrupt power in the city of New York pures the truff of my view. I am pleased to know that I have been an humble factor in bringing about the result of November 8.

This is the brave language of a man who knows his rights and will maintain them. He glories in all he has been able to contribute to the good cause Why Archbishop Corrigan should find fault with Father Ducey for being on the right side of a vital question is hard to understand.

The case will almost certainly be appealed to a higher court, and it is reasonably certain that the archbishop of New York will not be sustained. controversy thus opened is remarkable and highly interesting.

Ir the Republicans expect to win at the coming city election they will have to offer first class men or the people will not accept them. In these days the people are looking closely to the matter of good city government, and the people are right. This year the two tickets will be scanned much more narrowly than ever before.

Ir would be a good thing if this country could bring about peace between China and Japan without letting any of the powers of Europe have a finger in the pie. If Japan is willing the thing can be done, for China seems to be eager.

tain's office and settle Mone interviews on the senatorial question to-day and all in the same yein. It is another landslide.

KNOCK-ABOUT NOTES.

Since West Virginia went with a whirl into the column of protection, carrying the legislature with the congressmen, the United States senatorship has been naturally the topic of most interest to West Virginians, especially to those on the winning side. By something near akin to unanimous consent Mr. Elkins is the desire of his party. At the same time it must be admitted, and I am glad it is so, that the men who have served under General Goff on the hotly-contested fields of West Virginia politics have not lost their friendly feelpolitics have not lost their friendly lesiing for him as a man nor their confidence in him as a leader. Until General Goff became Judge Goff of the circuit court of the United States there was a very general and willing acquiscence in the expectation that he would be the first Republican United States
agastor from west Virginia under the be the first Republican United States senator from West Virginia under the new regime. That was known to be his worthy ambition, his fitness for the high station was unquestioned, and the Republicans of the state looked forward to the time when they might thus honor their leader in many battles. The general gave way to the index and the eral gave way to the judge, and the party chose another leader under whose generalship it has colebrated the glories, and is about to reap the fruits, of a signal victory.

Will Judge Goff be a candidate?" is a question heard very often since the victory. The Democratic politicians tried to make him a candidate, at least to "jolly" his old and true friends into starting a Geff movement. Judge Goff off the bench would give a Democrat, presumably Mr. William L. Wilson, a snug place for life. "If Goff isn't a candidate, why doesn't he come out and say so?" has been heard also. Meanwhile Judge Goff has gone on attending to his work on the bench. Unless something untoward happens to Judge Goff no Democrat will get his place on the bench. Judge Goff has no present thought of resigning. He is not a candidate for the seat held by Senator Camden and will not be. Nor will he write any cards or make any statement whatsoever for publication. This I know to be his attitude with regard to the senatorial question. whether he will end his days on the bench, or at some time re-enter the political field, is a story of the future which time will tell. I know one other thing in this tory. The Democratic politicians tried a story of the future which time will tell. I know one other thing in this connection—there are thousands of West Virginians ready to welcome him back to the field when he shall be ready to lay aside his gown.

Since General Goff went on the beach I have met many lawyers who practice I have met many lawyers who practice in his court, and as a West Virginian it has swelled my state pride to hear the good things said of him. From the beginning he gave great satisfaction, and I have yet to hear anything but commondation. On my way home from the southern development convention in Augusta, Georgia, in company with Governor MacCorkle and other follow representatives of West Virginia, we Governor MacCorkle and other fellow representatives of West Virginia, we fell in with a South Carolina Democrat who practices before Judge Goff. The South Carolinain said he had beard of Goff as a politician only and was surprised to find him a learned lawyer and an accomplished judge. He was surprised further to hear that for sixteen years Goff had been United States district attorney in West Virginia, in that capacity locking horns with the ablest lawyers in the state and holding his own against all comers. Senator Daniel, own against all comers. Senator Daniel, of Virginia, put it strongly in a talk with Mr. George W. Atkinson. "Your man Goff," he said, "is a delight and a surprise. He is a charming man and a wonder as a judge. I consider him a star in the profession." Judge Goff has earned a reputation for being courteous, quick, exact, just, qualities which give inster to the ermine and entitle the man who wears it to all the distinction that has come to this highly bonored West Virginian.

Everybody remembers that the coming of Mr. Elkins into West Virginia was regarded by many Republicans with misgiving. Mr. Elkins was known to be a strong and ambitious man. There were others of that kind already in the state, and General Goff was at the head of them. The apprehensive ones feared that Goff and Elkins would clash to the detrimant of the growing ones feared that Goff and Elkins would clash, to the detriment of the growing Republican party. Democratic politicians and newspapers did their best to set these men by the ears and to split into two factions the Republican party in the state. The man were too big to be caught that way. Mr. Elkins understood well that the first high preferment was to go to General Goff. If interstood west that the same and cost. If the Republicans could have elected a senator in 1889 that honor would have gone to General Goff. If it had not been for the gubernstorial tangle of that year General Goff might have gone into President Harrison's cabinet.

In time a way was opened for General Goff to go on the United States bench and for Mr. Elkins to go into the cabiand for Mr. Elkins to go into the cabinet as secretary of war, and the feud had not broken out yet. Mr. Elkins became the active leader of the Republican forces in West Virginia, victory has come under his leadership, and still the feud is as far off as ever. For the present Judge Goff remains on the bench, and in a few months Mr. Elkins will go to the senate of the United States. Everything works out harmoniously and pleasantly, the two big men do not fidd a cause of quarrel, there is no ritin the Republican ranks, and the forces of protection in West Virginia are in fine feckle for the next fight.

From the new to the old, from victory to defeat, from the rising to the setting sun. Behold a sun that sets majestically:

"PARKERSBURG, W. VA., Nov. 19, 1894. "Parkersburg, W. Va., Nov. 19, 1894.
"Your favor of the 14th instant received. I appreciate your friendship and the feelings which dictated your letter. Wasn't it an awful deluge, and it came without a cloud in the sky or a note of warning. I really saw no surface indications of the upheaval, but it has come gone, and so far as I am personally concerned it is now behind me without regrets. As you know I enterwithout regrets. As you know I enter-ed into the contest with great reluctance, and only because I could not avoid it.
I had my foot in the trap and dared not squeal. It was my duty to stand by the party, and I did it bravely till the last gun was fired. I am philosopher enough, however, to know that when a enough, however, to know that when a man goes into politics he must make up his mind that it is only a question of time as to when the cyclone will strike him, and for that reason I always look to the front and never backwards. As you say: 'we will now see what will happen.' Something always keeps hap-pening, you know, or life would become very monotonous.
"Sincerely your friend,

Meaman

Only a philosopher could write such lette s this. It is a private communication, penned with no thought of publication, but having been allowed to see it, I asked and obtained leave to print it. The retiring senator embodies in these few lines a whole treatise on the in these few lines a whole treatise on the uncertainty of politics, in which nothing is certain but disappointment to the man who follows long enough that delusive lead. "Something always keeps happening." It may be personal defeat, it may be party disaster—always something. The prizes are few, the contestants many, the disappointments often crushing. Happy is the man who can take his medicine as calmly as Senator Camden takes his. Nothing in his long public career does him more credit than this letter, which it is a great long public career does, him more creative than this letter, which it is a great pleasure to give to the world. A man does not show at his best in the hour of success. Before we can know him we must see the other side of him. A sharp reverse brings out the other side.

Warren Miller's Majority.

Warren Miller's Majority.

Parkersburg State Journal.

The Wheeling Register published some alleged tables of the majorities in each district for Congress, and put Miller's at 2,852. But it got Lincola county's vote credited wrong, giving Harvey Miller's majority vote, making a difference of 166, and also giving Miller 10 too few in Cabell. The Associated Press circulated the figures as "official." The fast is, Miller's majority is 3,048.
